Richard Shavell says that testifying before Congress on behalf of the construction industry, for changes to laws that would positively impact contractors throughout the nation, is one of his greatest accomplishments in his career.

Shavell came about his career honestly. His grandfather, older brother and mother were bookkeepers or accountants.

He learned very early on that by going into the field of accounting, he would gain a greater overview and understanding of how businesses function.

Clearly, Shavell understands how the tax structures of the IRS affect his clients. The construction industry is his passion. Look at his resume: Time and time again, he has gone to bat for the industry against the IRS and its propensity to change rules governing the taxation regarding home construction contracts.

To aid the industry, Shavell & Co. frequently offers continuing education sponsored by several builders' associations in the South Florida marketplace.

"For a boutique firm that focuses on just a few specialties, we consider it an accomplishment to hold a unique position where professionals and businesspeople in our targeted industries rely on us for educational opportunities," Shavell wrote.
